

Contents

---

1	Preface	11
1.1	The catalyst for this research	11
1.2	Acknowledgements	12
2	Introduction	14
2.1	Utopia versus reality – high ideals versus hard facts	14
2.2	A starting point: Roger Blum’s pronouncement on Swiss journalism	16
2.3	The framework of the thesis	17
2.4	Design of the thesis	20
2.5	The standpoint of the author	25
3	The Meanings of Censorship	27
3.1	A weapon of power	27
3.2	Comprehending the term “censorship”	28
3.3	The origin and development of authoritarian censorship	33
3.4	Censorship in today’s democratic constitutional state	38
3.5	Switzerland is no exception	50
4	The Origins and Evolution of Media Freedom in Switzerland	65
4.1	A hard-won quality	65
4.2	The emergence into an intellectual modern age through the “Helvetia”	66
4.3	Freedom of the press as a new quality	67
4.4	Searching for the new state	68
4.5	The development of the freedom of the press in the new federal state	71
4.6	Freedom of the press – a valuable quality	72
4.7	The Federal Constitution of 1999	76
5	Media and Democracy Today	79
5.1	No state within a state	79
5.2	The role of the media in a democracy	80
5.3	The importance of the media in the communication of information	84
5.4	Have the media taken over the function of the political parties?	86
5.5	The media-friendly politician	88

5.6	PR methods of marketing personalities	89
5.7	Media friendliness and election successes	91
5.8	Consensus democracy and the diminishing consensus	93
5.9	The media and the abuse of power	93
6	International Obligations and the Freedom of the Media in Switzerland	98
6.1	Dissent and conformity	98
6.2	The UNO Agreement	100
6.3	The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights	101
6.4	The International Convention on Racial Discrimination	102
6.5	The European Convention on Human Rights	103
6.6	The Swiss Federal Supreme Court restrained by the ECHR	104
7	National Standards	109
7.1	The Swiss Federal Constitution	109
7.2	The Swiss Penal Code	115
7.3	The Swiss Civil Code	118
7.4	The Federal Law on Unfair Competition	119
7.5	The Law on Radio and Television (LRTV)	120
7.6	The Swiss Press Council	121
7.7	The Declaration of the Duties and Rights of the Journalist	125
8	The Secretiveness of the Military	127
8.1	Under special protection	127
8.2	The media in the sights of military justice	128
8.3	The army's deaf ears	131
8.4	Unchanged practices	134
8.5	Criticism without results	136
8.6	Military justice as a disciplinary institution	137
9	Media Organisations and Journalists' Associations	139
9.1	An unprotected area	139
9.2	Impressum and Comedia	140
9.3	The professional register ("BR")	141
9.4	Privileges	142
9.5	The press card	143

9.6	Further services	144
9.7	A difficult position vis-à-vis employers	145
9.8	Everyday examples	146
9.9	At the publishers' mercy	149
9.10	The campaign for a new Collective Agreement	150
9.11	The Declaration of the Duties and Rights of a Journalist and the Federal Diploma	152
9.12	A society striving for quality	153
10	Education and training in journalism	156
10.1	Specialised professional training as a core element	156
10.2	A shift of emphasis from talent to training	157
10.3	No more academics	159
10.4	Academic background	160
10.5	Basic training	161
10.6	Advanced training	167
10.7	The status quo in the editorial office	169
11	Print Media	172
11.1	A nation of newspaper readers	172
11.2	A democratic structure requires regional newspapers	174
11.3	From party to forum newspaper	175
11.4	The great newspaper demise	176
11.5	Mergers and expansion	179
11.6	The power of the market	181
11.7	The monopoly situation within the daily newspaper market	181
11.8	The Bern model – an exception	183
11.9	The consequences for journalism and journalists	184
11.10	Regionalisation and localisation	185
11.11	Freesheets	187
11.12	Political rescue efforts	188
12	Radio and Television	190
12.1	Swiss radio – a success story	190
12.2	The predominance of Swiss television SRG SSR	191
12.3	A national monopoly	192
12.4	Radio and television under the Swiss Federal Constitution	194
12.5	The Law on Radio and Television	195
12.6	The key points of the new LRTV	198

12.7	Private radio and television stations	200
12.8	A journalistic challenge	204
12.9	The programme orientation of the private channels	205
13	The Internet – progressing by fits and starts	208
13.1	Round-the-clock presence	208
13.2	Ideal technical conditions	210
13.3	High user figures	211
13.4	The players	212
13.5	Online editorial departments with a limited scope	213
13.6	The status of online editorial departments	217
13.7	Quality not yet assured	219
13.8	Further developments	220
13.9	Weblogs as competition or enhancement?	222
13.10	Weblogs as watchdogs	223
13.11	The weblogs of the established media	225
13.12	Instrumentalisation and lack of impact	226
14	The Power of Advertising	228
14.1	The media as commercial enterprises	228
14.2	Advertising boycotts to penalise the media	230
14.3	The Federal Cartel Commission and the “boycott”	231
14.4	Other forms of “punishment”	232
14.5	Political reasons for punitive measures	233
14.6	Anticipatory obedience and grovelling ingratiation	234
14.7	Interwoven connections	236
14.8	Gifts and concessions	238
14.9	Publicity as a weapon against boycotts and pressure	241
14.10	Spoon-feeding the media	242
15	Playing with the Truth	244
15.1	Economic necessity	244
15.2	“Mid-risk journalism”	246
15.3	Borderline journalism and the descent into fabrication	247
15.4	The Kummer case	248
15.5	The Wolffers case	250
15.6	Limited self-criticism by editors	251
15.7	The danger of making assumptions	253
15.8	Seduced by prestige and money	256
15.9	Pictures can also be deceptive	257

16	Self-censorship and blind obedience	259
16.1	Subtle pressure	259
16.2	Critical proximity	261
16.3	Sleaze	263
16.4	Gentle coercion	264
16.5	Blatant threats	267
16.6	When the scissors are used	268
16.7	No chance to fight back	270
16.8	Military-style management in the editorial offices	273
17	The Failure of Media Journalism	275
17.1	A blind spot	275
17.2	The example of the Tages-Anzeiger	276
17.3	Media journalism for insiders	278
17.4	Relevance from the point of view of the general public	280
17.5	Quality and self-regulation	281
17.6	A service rather than a form of communication	282
17.7	In the company's own interests	283
17.8	Media journalism as PR journalism	285
17.9	Journalists with their hands tied	285
17.10	The exclusion of media scientists	287
17.11	Media blogs as an alternative?	288
18	Conclusion	290
18.1	Open borders for the media	290
18.2	Findings	292
18.3	Recommendations	301
19	Appendices	307
19.1	Appendix 1: Facts and Figures about Switzerland 2006	307
19.2	Appendix 2: Composition of the Swiss Federal Assembly	308
19.3	Appendix 3: Advertisement Statistics – Revenue per Medium	311
19.4	Appendix 4: Newspapers and Circulation Figures 1939 – 2004	312
19.5	Appendix 5: Readership of the Swiss Press 2005	313
19.6	Appendix 6: Declaration of the Duties and Rights of a Journalist	314

19.7	Appendix 7: Directives Relating to the Declaration of the Duties and Rights of the Journalist	317
19.8	Appendix 8: The Seven Dominant Swiss Media Corporations	327
20	Bibliography and References	330
20.1	Literature	330
20.2	Periodicals (newspapers, news magazines, special interest publications and internet)	344
20.3	Speeches and contributions for conferences	355
20.4	Official or approved papers and sources	356