

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements.....	9
-----------------------	---

I.

Amsterdam's false dawn	11
1. Summary: A decade of responsibility	11
2. The starting point—a question waiting for an answer	12

II.

The characteristics of the Amsterdam Years	15
1. Characterising migration policy	15
2. The policy prescriptions of the Amsterdam Treaty	17
3. The characteristics of the Amsterdam years	19

III.

The continued influence of interior ministries	25
1. Policymaking under Amsterdam: Rules and reality	25
2. Political dominance and the skewing of policy	31

IV.

Interior ministries as 'arch-rationalists'	33
1. The venue-shopping thesis	33
2. European integration in the venue-shopping thesis	34
3. Lessons from new institutionalism	38
4. Venue-shoppers as arch-rationalists	41
5. Core hypotheses: Interior ministers as 'arch-rationalists'	42
6. A new conception of the Amsterdam rules	43

V.

Asylum policy and the power of old arguments	47
1. The soft side of venue-shopping	47
2. The weight of history: The importance of the 'complete' policy image	49
3. Venue shifts in the 1970s: The joys of a complete policy-image	51
4. Institutional changes at Amsterdam: The missing substantive dimension	53
5. After the institutional change at Amsterdam	59
6. Conclusions	69

VI.
Security policy and the role of satellite cooperation	71
1. Venue-shopping: Expanding on the basics	71
2. The returns directive: Interior ministries exploit their EU powers	72
3. The PNR agreement: Interior ministries exploit international pressure	76
4. Framework Decision on Data Protection: Interior ministries exploit satellite cooperation	80
5. Conclusions	83

VII.
The G6 and the European loop	85
1. Bringing back in the domestic level	85
2. Identifying international loops: An analytical framework	86
3. The closure of the 'EU loop'	90
4. Alternative loops: The specifics of the G6 and Heathrow meetings	95
5. Matching supply and demand at G6 and Heathrow	100
6. Conclusions	108

VIII.
The development-migration nexus and the responsible policymaker	109
1. Policy interaction	109
2. Conceptual perspectives on policy interaction and coordination	110
3. The distribution of political resources in EU migration policy	112
4. Approaches to migration: External development vs. internal stability?	115
5. EU migration policy outcomes: What evidence of interaction?	116
6. Tracing the sources of interaction: The European Council	121
7. Horizontal pressures: DG Development and the interior ministries	125
8. Conclusions: Explaining the development turn	129

IX.
Rights vs. effectiveness: The foibles of the responsible approach	131
1. The mistakes of responsible policies	131
2. The responsible approach to migration	131
3. The rights-effectiveness nexus	133
4. The legitimacy deficit	137
5. A typology of legitimacy at the European level	138
6. Characteristics of EU migration policymaking	140
7. A taller order: Regulating an invisible phenomenon	141
8. The symbolic politics of border management: Frontex	142
9. Conclusions	144

X.
Justice and Home affairs cooperation after Lisbon:
the British litmus test	145
1. The British litmus test	145
2. British exceptionalism	145
3. The Club of Ministers	147
4. A new Treaty and a new setup	148
5. The British position	150
6. Two scenarios	152
7. The creation of a new hybrid	155
XI.
The failures of the Stockholm Programme and the emergence of a new political actor	157
1. The strategic deficit	157
2. The new Treaty and the need for strategic thinking	158
3. The Stockholm Programme evaluated:
Programming as inter-institutional mud-wrestling	162
4. Future perspectives:
The communitarian vocation of the European Council	166
XII.
Paradigm change after Lisbon: Control by liberalisation?	171
1. A liberal future?	171
2. The control paradigm	171
3. Restricting migration by liberalising migration channels?.....	173
4. Paradigm change: The liberalisation of responsibility	174
5. Perspectives for the future	176
Bibliography	179
Official documents	179
Further documents	182
Secondary sources	183
Media	195
Abbreviations	198