

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	5
Table of Contents	7
List of Figures and Tables	11
Acronyms & Abbreviations	13
Introduction	15
Chapter 1	27
I. Methodology	27
II. Analytical perspective	30
III. Empirical method	32
Chapter 1 (B)	37
I. Case-study justification	37
1. Medellín: urban growth and transformation and class impacts in space	37
2. The urbe in Latin America	39
3. Medellín: the interrelated spheres of industrialization, urbanization, informality and violence	44
Chapter 2	49
I. Theoretical Framework	49
1. Opening the door to Marxian theory	50
2. Space and geography as secondary spheres in social theory	55
3. Space: a missing realm in Marxian theory?	59
4. Incorporating geography and space into Marxian theory	62
	7

5.	Spatio-temporal fixes: imperialisms of capital and imperialisms of territory	66
6.	Accumulation via Dispossession: the violence of reshaping space and society	70
7.	The spatio-temporalities of capitalism in the city: dilemmas and prospects	73
8.	Public space and the rule of exchange value	76
9.	Urbanization and industrialization in capitalist-city development	80
10.	The spheres and avenues of class power and subaltern power struggles	84
11.	Informal struggle and the terrain of citizenship in Latin America	90
12.	Clientelism: the citizenship of concrete interests	92
Chapter 3		97
1.	Modernizing the city: the science of urbanism	102
2.	Class bias in the urban development of Medellín	106
4.	The official capitalist city and the pervasive 'popular' city	108
5.	The limits of the capital industrial model (1950-1980)	111
6.	Urban insecurity, economic fracturing and the disabled State: 1980-1990	120
7.	The reconfiguration of the State: decentralization and the new sphere of Public Space (1990-2008)	126
8.	The Birth of a Rights discourse and the emergence of a Colombian citizenry	128
9.	Aesthetic beauty or community vivacity?	133
Chapter 4		138
I.	Street vending and its governance within the informal sector debate	138
1.	The informal labour market: the forgotten sphere of political economic theory	139
4.	Structural 'unemployment', 'underemployment' and the informal sector	145
5.	Macro-economic solutions to sectoral and productive heterogeneities	153
6.	Re-sketching the urban transformations and their association with the formal, informal and illegal economies (a historical backtracking)	156
7.	From the informal 'sector' debate to the specificities of informal street vending: global and local transformations	159
8.	Street vending in the age of modernity and post-modernity	160

9. Informal street vendors: a distinct category of informal agents and activity	165
10. The further division of street vendors: time and stability	170
11. Informal street vending: ignore it, endorse it, or eliminate it?	171
 Chapter 5	 178
I. Empirical-political: the regulation of ISV in Medellín	178
1. Informal street trade and local government regulation pre-1988	178
2. Popular local and departmental elections and the reinvigoration of public space: impacts on the governance of informal street vending	183
4. Local administration policies to recuperate the city centre. Juan Gómez Martínez and the construction of large-scale vendor markets	185
5. Omar Flórez Vélez: the pseudo-passive approach to informal street vending regulation	188
6. Luis Alfredo Ramos: an integral approach to informal street vending regulation	189
7. Sergio Naranjo and the reordering of the city centre	190
8. The return of Juan Gómez Martínez and mass-scale vendor relocation in CCPs	193
9. Luis Pérez and the resurgence of citizenship vis-à-vis public space	194
10. Independent politics and the emergence of Sergio Fajardo	198
11. The present administration: Alonso Salazar and political continuance	212
12. Governing urban public space and informal street vending in the period of decentralization (1988-2008)	216
 Chapter 6	 223
I. Institutional-legal: The Tutelage Action of Rights	223
1. The normative definition and protection of public space	224
2. The 1991 Constitution: the guarantor of citizen rights	226
4. The Constitutional Court's political interpretation of the informal street vending-public space recuperation conflict	232
5. The fundamental right to the vital minimum	240
6. The Constitutional demarcation of how far State policies can stretch	241

Chapter 7	244
I. Grand Vendor Survey	244
1. Survey of Medellín's vendors: working conditions and vendor perception of local administrations	244
2. Three-tiered informal vendor survey	247
3. Findings	250
4. Group 2 (vendors in government-built kiosks)	267
5. Group three (CCP vendors)	272
6. Conclusions	283
7. Colombian trade union confederations and the informal street vending sector: gradual improvement in organizational drive?	289
8. Informal vendor action and relationship to the present municipal government of Medellín	294
9. Final Reflections	295
10. Moving the theoretical debate along	299
11. Concretely examining local political regulation of ISV	301
Annex 1	305
I. Formal Interviews	305
II. Informal conversations (apart from the vendor surveys of Chapter 7)	306
Bibliography	307